Summary: Collection of manuscripts, including correspondence, journals, diaries, scrapbooks, clippings, artwork, and ephemera; photographic prints; and audio recordings comprising the archive of Israel (Izzy) Goodman Young, who was proprietor of the Folklore Center, New York, N.Y. (beginning in 1957), and then, beginning in 1973, of the Folklore Centrum, Stockholm, Sweden. The collection documents the late 1950s and 1960s folk music revival, and Izzy Young's contribution to the scene. Includes documentation about prominent musicians, poets, and dancers, and about concerts, music festivals, and music camps around the United States and in Sweden. Includes articles and writings about Bob Dylan and his musical career, and correspondence with significant figures in the folk music scene, such as Pete Seeger, Mark Moss, and Dick Waterman. Scrapbooks document concerts and other events, including the 1961 Washington Square Park Protest, which followed the New York Police Department's attempt to stop singing in the park. Audio recordings are of radio programs, and concerts that Young promoted, such as those with Hedy West, David Bromberg, Jean Ritchie, Elizabeth Cotten, and many others.

Biographical Note

Israel (Izzy) Goodman Young was born March 26, 1928 on the Lower East Side of Manhattan. In the 1940s, Young fell in love with square dancing through his involvement with Margot Mayo's American Square Dance Group, where he met folk musicians such as Pete Seeger, Oscar Brand, and Reverend Gary Davis. After accumulating a catalog of books about folk music, Young opened the Folklore Center in 1957, a music store and gathering place for the folk music revival scene in Greenwich Village. Young organized and promoted folk music concerts and poetry readings at the Folklore Center and at other venues in New York City. He was a founder of the Friends of Old Time Music, a group which presented concerts of traditional folk musicians in New York City venues. Young also organized what is thought to be Bob Dylan's first formal concert on November 4, 1961 at Carnegie Hall, as well as the early concerts of musicians such as Tim Buckley, Joni Mitchell, and Mississippi John Hurt. He wrote about the folk music scene in his Sing Out! Magazine column, "Frets and Frails," from 1959 to 1969. In 1973, Young emigrated to Stockholm, Sweden, and opened the Folklore Centrum, through which he has organized and promoted cultural events, including Scandinavian folk music and dance events. From the mid-1980s until 2012, Young issued the Folklore Centrum newsletter, a resource for events and commentary about Swedish and American folk music.

Scope and Content

Collection of manuscripts, including correspondence, journals, diaries, scrapbooks, clippings, artwork, and ephemera; photographic prints; and audio recordings comprising the archive of Israel (Izzy) Goodman Young, who was proprietor of the Folklore Center, New York, N.Y. (beginning in 1957), and, beginning in 1973, of the Folklore Centrum, Stockholm, Sweden. The collection documents the late 1950s and 1960s folk music revival, and Izzy Young's contribution to the scene. Includes documentation about prominent musicians, poets, and dancers, and about concerts, music festivals, and music camps around the United States and in Sweden. Includes articles and writings about Bob Dylan and his musical career, and correspondence with significant figures in the folk music scene, such as Pete Seeger, Mark Moss, and Dick Waterman. Scrapbooks document concerts and other events, including the 1961 Washington Square Park Protest, which followed the New York Police Department's attempt to stop singing in the park. Sound recordings in the collection include radio programs, and concerts Young promoted, such as those with Hedy West, David Bromberg, Jean Ritchie, Elizabeth Cotten, Young Tradition, Tom Paley, Mike Seeger, Tuli Kupferberg, and many others. Includes eight pieces of original artwork by Harry Smith, artist, filmmaker, and a friend of Young's.
