Acquisition Information

The papers of Calvin Coolidge, United States president and businessman, were deposited in the Library of Congress by Coolidge in 1929 and converted to a gift by his wife, Grace Goodhue Coolidge, in 1953. Additional material was transferred to the Library of Congress in 1985 from the Office of Presidential Libraries, National Archives and Records Administration. Other items were received by gift and purchase from various sources between 1921 and 2022.

Processing History

The collection was prepared for indexing and microfilming in 1965 and revised and expanded in 1989 and in 1994. Material transferred from the National Archives and Records Administration in 1985 was processed by Paul D. Ledvina in 1989. Other material received between 1970 and 1990 was processed and the finding aid revised and expanded by Patrick Kerwin in 1994. In 2009 the finding aid was expanded by including description of the main collection from the published index. Material received by gift in 2018 and purchase in 2022 was processed and the finding aid revised by Amanda Loeb in 2022.

Additional Guides

The microfilm edition of these papers (not including additions) is indexed in the Index to the Calvin Coolidge Papers (Washington, D.C., 1965) prepared as part of the President's Papers Index Series. The index is available online at <https://hdl.loc.gov/loc.gdc/gdclocn.65060004>. The addition to the collection was partially described in the Library of Congress Information Bulletin (Jan. 26, 1973).

Transfers

Photographs have been transferred to the Library's Prints and Photographs Division where they are identified as part of these papers.

Copyright Status

Copyright in the unpublished writings of Calvin Coolidge in these papers and in other collections of papers in the custody of the Library of Congress has been dedicated to the public.

Access and Restrictions

The Coolidge Papers are open to research. Researchers are advised to contact the Manuscript Reading Room prior to visiting. Many collections are stored off-site and advance notice is needed to retrieve these items for research use.

Microfilm

A microfilm edition of part of these papers is available on 190 reels. Consult reference staff in the Manuscript Division concerning availability for purchase or interlibrary loan. To promote preservation of the originals, researchers are required to consult the microfilm edition as available.

Online Content

History of the Collection

[From Index to the Calvin Coolidge Papers (Washington, D.C.: Library of Congress, 1965), pp.v-vi]

The Calvin Coolidge Papers in the Library of Congress consist largely of correspondence files remaining in the White House when the President left office on March 4, 1929. Following an exchange of letters between Mr. Coolidge and J. Franklin Jameson, [1] then Chief of the Manuscript Division in the Library, the collection, now estimated to number 175,000 pieces, was transferred to the Library of Congress as a deposit. Thereafter scholars were permitted to use the papers with the assent of Mr. Coolidge or, following his death in 1933, with that of his widow. Mrs. Coolidge formally gave the papers to the Library in 1953. [2] Since her death in 1957 access has been unrestricted. To this large group of papers, constituting series 1 in the microfilm edition and in this index, a few other Coolidge items acquired over the years have been added to form a much smaller series 2. Series 3 comprises three substantial volumes of names and addresses of guests at formal White House social functions.

It might be assumed that so large a number of manuscripts would provide enough material for a thorough study of Coolidge's long career of public service which began in Northampton, Mass., in 1899 and culminated in the Presidency, or at least that the 6 years Coolidge spent as Chief Executive would be rather completely documented. Such unfortunately, is not the case. The scholar must look elsewhere for the record of Coolidge's career before his becoming President, for the correspondence files for 1923-29, bulky as they are, reveal very little significant events of this period. These thousands of letters are mostly those from private citizens along with carbon copies of routine replies. They include only a small quantity of correspondence with political or governmental figures.

Although the "disappointingly thin" [3] character of the Coolidge Papers was long apparent, explanations could only be surmised until 1962 when the Edward T. Clark Papers were opened in the Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress. [4] Clark, a fellow Amherst College alumnus, had served as private secretary to Coolidge during the latter's tenure as Vice President and as President. In a letter to Harry E. Ross, Coolidge's last secretary, written shortly after the former President's death in 1933, Clark related that "Mr. Coolidge's desire was to destroy everything in the so-called personal files and there would have been nothing preserved if I had not taken some things out on my own responsibility." [5] Five years later in a conversation with St. George L. Sioussat, then Chief of the Manuscript Division, Mrs. Coolidge stated that the late President had "destroyed all his 'personal' papers." [6] The evidence is thus quite strong that Coolidge eliminated, if not quite all, at least a large part of his personal papers. The remainder, comprising the Calvin Coolidge Papers in the Library of Congress indexed in the present work and the smaller collection of Coolidge material at the Forbes Library in Northampton, is therefore of considerably less importance than its size or the career of its subject might suggest.

The right of each President to dispose of his personal papers in any way he might choose has been assumed throughout the history of the office, and Coolidge is not the first Chief Executive to destroy portions of his files. Martin Van Buren, Franklin Pierce, Chester A. Arthur, and William McKinley all destroyed parts of their personal papers from one motive or another. [7] In the case of Coolidge, the reason for such destruction very likely lies in his personality. His reserve is legendary. A shy and taciturn man, even by Yankee standards, he did not change the habits of a lifetime when he entered the White House. William Allen White, a critical though not unsympathetic biographer, recalled spending several days with Coolidge in 1924. "What I wanted," he wrote, "was his slant on things, his point of view, the light that glowed in the inner chambers of his heart." But, White added, "he kept it hooded." [8] Claude M. Fuess, a quite sympathetic biographer, also lamented Coolidge's silences, noting that "his secretiveness is almost unparalleled among American statesmen." [9] Finally, Edward T. Clark, who knew something of the contents of the destroyed papers and who was probably privy to as many secrets as anyone around Coolidge, in another letter commenting on the papers' destruction noted that "this would not involve the loss which you might at first imagine because as President, Mr. Coolidge did not follow the practice of other Presidents in trying to explain his Administration through letters to friends." Hoover and Wilson, he continued, had deliberately tried to supply posterity with a record through memoranda or letters on public affairs. "Mr. Coolidge, however, strictly avoided this and the files, therefore, consisted of the huge number of letters to him which might be of interest but with replies which reveal little or nothing." [10] Although this explanation may be small consolation to the student of 20th-century American politics, it is in keeping with Coolidge's personality. If he did not actually say "I have never been hurt by what I have not said," [11] the statement epitomizes both Coolidge's attitude and the letters that have survived. The destruction of part of his own papers may have been but an extension of this philosophy.

It is against this background that the present work must be reviewed. The character of the surviving Coolidge Papers is such that it was decided that the most useful as well as most economical index would be one organized around the "case" files and subject titles of the collection's contents, together with cross- references. In consequence, this index is much smaller than would be one which indexed every correspondent and every letter.

Coolidge material, of course, survives in other collections. The Edward T. Clark Papers, already referred to, contain a number of Coolidge letters and other material about him, as do the papers of his confidant and adviser Frank Waterman Stearns at Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass. The Everett Sanders Papers in the Library of Congress contain reading copies of Coolidge speeches. At the Forbes Library in Northampton, Massachusetts, there is a significant collection of Coolidge material. There, in the Calvin Coolidge Memorial Room, are to be found letters received and copies of letters sent while Coolidge was Governor of Massachusetts, along with clippings, copies of speeches, and memorabilia.

Scope and Content Note for Additions to the Collection

Additions to the papers of Calvin Coolidge are designated as Series 4 of the collection. Additions are not available on microfilm and are not described in the published index of the papers.

The 1994 addition spans the years 1915-1932 and includes correspondence and related material, appointment books, and volumes of incoming telegraph messages. The telegraph messages also date from the first months of the Herbert Hoover administration. Of particular interest is a note written by Coolidge and given to his secretary, Everett Sanders, to copy for distribution to journalists in Rapid City, South Dakota. The note reads, "I do not choose to run for President in nineteen twenty eight."

The 2022 addition spans the years 1920-1926 and consists chiefly of correspondence and writings concerning Calvin Coolidge's authorship of three articles for the Delineator, an American women's magazine, on the subject of domestic radicalism and communist influence in women's colleges.

Arrangement of the Papers

Correspondents include Marie Mattingly Meloney, the editor of the Delineator, William Brown Meloney, her husband, and Edward Tracy Clark, Coolidge's secretary. There is also correspondence between Marie Meloney and Vassar College faculty member Burges Johnson, in which Johnson questions Coolidge's authorship of the articles and the validity of the sources cited by the author. The addition also includes handwritten drafts of each article, which discuss the threat of domestic radicalism in the United States and communist influence in American women's colleges. Research material includes lists of quotations from women's college publications. There are also two contemporary reviews of the articles and a signed photograph of Coolidge. Material types include correspondence, telegrams, handwritten drafts, notes, printed matter, clippings, and a photograph. Arranged by type of material and therein alphabetically.

BOX 4:294	2022 Addition, 1920-1926 The 2022 Addition includes correspondence concerning Calvin Coolidge's authorship of a three-article series published in the Delineator, an American women's magazine, from June to August, 1921. Correspondents include Marie Mattingly Meloney, the editor of the Delineator, William Brown Meloney, her husband, and Edward Tracy Clark, Coolidge's secretary. There is also correspondence between Marie Meloney and Vassar College faculty member Burges Johnson, in which Johnson questions Coolidge's authorship of the articles and the validity of the sources cited by the author. The addition also includes handwritten drafts of each article, which discuss the threat of domestic radicalism in the United States and communist influence in American women's colleges. Research material includes lists of quotations from women's college publications. There are also two contemporary reviews of the articles and a signed photograph of Coolidge. Material types include correspondence, telegrams, handwritten drafts, notes, printed matter, clippings, and a photograph. Arranged by type of material and therein alphabetically.
