Scope and Content Note

The papers of Frank Nicholas Stanton (1908-2006) span the years 1908-2006, with the bulk of the material dating from his matriculation at Ohio Wesleyan University in 1926 to his departure as chairman of the American National Red Cross in 1979. Following the completion of his doctoral research into the habits of radio listeners in 1935 for the psychology department at Ohio State University, the Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. (CBS Inc.) offered Stanton a position in its research department. Stanton was promoted to vice president in 1942 and selected president of the network in 1946 at the age of thirty-eight. Upon his retirement from CBS Inc. in 1973, Stanton was appointed chairman of the American National Red Cross by President Richard M. Nixon, serving in that capacity until 1979. While the collection explores Stanton's legacy as the broadcast executive who, along with colleague Chairman William S. Paley, is credited with molding CBS Inc. into a national network empire, the documentation is often uneven, containing a limited number of fully developed files and few references to his personal life. The papers contain correspondence, memoranda, speeches and writings, subject files, reports and studies, transcripts, testimony, drafts and typescripts, press clippings and releases, printed matter, and miscellaneous material and are organized into the following series: Executive Files, Subject File, Speeches and Writings, Miscellany, Classified, and Oversize.

In 1973, Stanton left CBS Inc. at the mandatory retirement age of sixty-five and became chairman of the American National Red Cross. The Executive Files consist largely of papers and records created and received by Stanton as corporate executive during this transition, primarily for the years from 1970 to 1973. In addition to the American National Red Cross, Stanton pursued multiple opportunities in business, education, government, and the arts upon his retirement and served on the boards and advisory councils of a variety of private corporations, foundations, and nonprofit organizations. The Executive Files pertain chiefly to these organizations, the most prominent of which include the American National Red Cross, Business Committee for the Arts, Business Council, Carnegie Institution of Washington, and Harvard University. The series sheds light on the operations and policy decisions of these and other organizations and the role played by Stanton as director and advocate. Typescripts and transcripts from speaking engagements and congressional testimony supplement similar material arranged in the Speeches and Writings series.

The United States Advisory Commission on Information, established in 1948, is composed of five representatives from business, public service, and the communications media appointed by the president for three-year terms. It functions as an advisory body and recommends policies and programs to the United States Information Agency for broadcasting information about the United States to foreign countries. Stanton served as chairman of the commission, 1964-1973, and the Executive Files contain material relevant to both organizations. In addition, the series also includes a file regarding William F. Buckley (1925-2008), Stanton's colleague and fellow board member on the commission. A staunch proponent of broadcast journalism and defender of First Amendment rights, Stanton testified often before Congress on freedom of the press issues and sought, on behalf of the broadcast industry, protections equal to that of the printed press. Subject headings located in the Executive Files address these concerns.

While the Subject File is largely devoted to Stanton's corporate career with CBS Inc., papers relating to his research projects are also of interest. In 1937, Stanton began a collaboration with Paul Felix Lazarsfeld resulting in the invention of... the program analyzer, an audience measuring device that could determine the probability of a radio program's public appeal and advertising potential that was later expanded for television and used by CBS Inc. for several decades. As network president, Stanton focused on organizational and policy issues, leaving entertainment programming to Chairman William S. Paley. As early as 1948, he fought for the right of broadcasters to present editorials and to be accorded the same rights as print journalists. An advocate for technological improvements, he championed the development of color television. Stanton reorganized the company in 1951 and directed CBS Inc. through a period of diversification and corporate expansion by decentralizing its administration and acquiring new business investments, including the New York Yankees in 1964, to create a media conglomerate. While all of these topics are touched on in the Subject File, none are covered in great depth. Limited correspondence exchanged with popular show host Arthur Godfrey and with William S. Paley is also contained in the network's files.

In 1960, Stanton aided in initiating the first televised presidential debate between candidates John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon by persuading Congress to suspend the “equal time” provision of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, which requires networks to grant equal time to all political candidates. Material concerning the 1960 telecast, for which Stanton won the second of his three personal George Foster Peabody Awards, and subsequent unsuccessful efforts to televise debates in the 1964, 1968, and 1972 presidential campaigns is arranged within the CBS Inc. files.

Stanton's primary interest was centered on promoting and protecting the network's news division. In the late 1960s he withstood pressure from the Johnson administration for allowing CBS News to air critical reports on the Vietnam War. In 1971, Stanton risked the threat of jail defending the CBS documentary The Selling of the Pentagon, which exposed the use of public funds by the Defense Department to promote a public relations campaign in support of the Vietnam War. Stanton challenged a federal suit brought by Congress and refused a subpoena from the House Commerce Committee demanding the news sources used in the documentary, successfully arguing that the information was protected under the freedom of the press provision as guaranteed by the First Amendment. The controversy is fully documented in the Subject File, including the proceedings and testimony from the congressional hearings.

Displaying a wide range of interests and possessing broad artistic and conceptual abilities, Stanton was known for his sense of corporate style and often became involved in the creation and development of the company's imagery from the construction of network headquarters in New York (“Black Rock”) to the design of the company's iconic eye logo. “Black Rock,” designed by Eero Saarinen, was opened to acclaim in 1964 and received several architectural awards that are referenced in the Subject File along with Stanton's drawings for the building's interior design.

Due to his position as a broadcasting executive and his many appearances before Congress, Stanton was known to major political figures, and the Subject File contains letters to him from presidents Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson, Richard M. Nixon, and Gerald R. Ford. Papers relating to Lyndon B. Johnson, who shared a long, and at times adversarial, relationship with Stanton, are the largest of the presidential files. Copies of transcripts of Stanton's interviews recorded as part of the oral history program conducted under the auspices of the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library are included here and provide insight into their personal association and the interplay between the media and the White House. In addition, material concerning a controversial three-year contract between Johnson and CBS Inc. that gave the company the exclusive rights to a series of interviews with the former president is also located in the Subject File.

Stanton lectured widely on freedom of the press issues and the First Amendment, government and the media, television journalism, and politics and kept a full schedule of speaking engagements and radio and television appearances as well as appearing as a participant on numerous discussion panels and in seminars. Because Stanton was recognized as a major spokesperson for the broadcasting industry, his opinions were often sought, his speeches frequently quoted, and his testimony in many appearances before Congress part of the public record. The Speeches and Writings series is the largest and most comprehensive in the collection consisting largely of the drafts, typescripts, and printed copies of his speeches, statements, and testimony before Congress and the Federal Communications Commission.

Stanton was recognized with awards and tributes from many organizations and received honorary degrees from various colleges and universities as listed in the Miscellany series. The series also contains juvenile memorabilia and school records as well as journals, scrapbooks, and photographs composed as travelogues from two trips to Europe taken by Stanton as a young man. Occasional letters exchanged with Harold E. Burrt and Hadley Cantril, early mentors of Stanton, and with Thomas E. Dewey are contained in the Miscellany series as well.
