Biographical Note

In addition to a career as a choreographer and ballet dancer, scholar Judith Chazin-Bennahum is the author of numerous books and articles on dance and dance research. She earned a doctorate in romance languages and the title of Distinguished Professor Emerita from the University of New Mexico. Many of the photos assembled by Chazin-Bennahum in this collection were acquired during research for her book The Ballets of Antony Tudor, published in 1994 by Oxford University Press.

Antony Tudor, born in London on April 4, 1908, was a choreographer and dancer. He was originally named William Cook. His teachers included Marie Rambert, Pearl Argyle, Margaret Craske, and Harold Turner. Tudor danced from 1930 to 1937 with the Ballet Club, later named Ballet Rambert. In 1937, he founded the London Ballet, for which he choreographed until 1940. From 1939 to 1950, he was resident choreographer for the American Ballet Theatre in New York. He taught with the Metropolitan Opera Ballet School beginning in 1950, and the Juilliard School from 1957 to 1963. In 1974, Tudor became associate director for American Ballet Theatre. Tudor displayed a comic sensibility in many of his ballets, but he is best-known for his psychological ballets that explored jealousy, despair, rejection, and other deep emotions. Throughout his lifetime, Tudor's choreographic work was performed by companies in Europe, Australia, and Japan; his achievements were marked by numerous awards. Tudor died April 19, 1987, in New York. The following chronology dates Tudor's most significant choreography.
