Biographical Note

One of the first women to achieve prominence as a photographer, Frances Benjamin Johnston opened a studio in Washington, D.C., in 1890, carrying out portrait and photojournalism assignments while also contributing to art photography and pictorialism. She entered into partnership with Mattie Edwards Hewitt, operating a New York City studio that specialized in architectural and garden photography, 1913-1917. Continuing this emphasis, Johnston toured the United States giving lantern slide lectures on gardens and architecture and contributed to architectural surveys, including two separate collections: the Pictorial Archives of Early American Architecture (1930) and the Carnegie Survey of the Architecture of the South (1933-1937).

For a more extensive biography, see the Frances Benjamin Johnston: Biographical Overview and Chronology.

Scope and Content Note

The Frances Benjamin Johnston photograph collection (Library of Congress) consists of more than 25,000 visual materials, primarily photographs made by Johnston in the course of her studio and commission work. Also included are approximately 1,250 items that Johnston collected and donated to the Library of Congress (e.g., family photos, book and magazine posters, prints, drawings, and silhouettes.) The material spans the period 1864-1947; the bulk of the material was created between 1897 and 1927. Almost all of these pictures are available to researchers through subject groupings called LOTs. Some photos can also be found in the Biographical, Presidential, Geographical, and Subject browsing files in Frances Benjamin Johnston photograph collection (Library of Congress) the reading room, and among unprocessed collections. Some items donated by Johnston are filed with the poster, drawing, fine print, and historical print series, and they can be located through Johnston's name in our Online Catalog.

For additional information about the Frances Benjamin Johnston photograph collection (Library of Congress), see the Collection Overview.

Arrangement

The collection is organized into 118 groups (LOTs). Some materials have been incorporated into filing series for special formats, such as fine prints, drawings, Johnston's original negatives, etc.

LOTs are usually grouped by subject matter or physical format. In order to preserve evidence of Johnston's photographic techniques and working habits, unretouched and uncropped photoprints and proofs produced from the same negatives have, in many cases, been included in the same group of images. Johnston's notes, as well as identification supplied later by others, can be found on many of the photoprints.
