Biographical Note

After earning his Bachelor of Architecture degree from Cornell University in 1912, Edward Aloysius Jerome O'Connor practiced as an architect in New York City, both independently and in the offices of architectural firms. In 1941, he moved to Washington, D.C., to perform war-related government work, including work on the Pentagon. After the war, O'Connor remained in Washington, D.C., where he worked independently until his death in 1977. The majority of his extant drawings are represented in the O'Connor Architectural Drawing Archive (Library of Congress).

Scope and Content Note

Primarily architectural drawings by E. Jerome O'Connor for residential buildings, commercial buildings, educational buildings, religious buildings, and health care facilities in Washington, D.C., and surrounding suburbs. Among his designs represented in the archive are single detached houses; office buildings, including the headquarters for the National Grange; a building for the State Teachers College in Frostburg, Maryland; apartment houses, nursing homes, and a monastery; also present are competition drawings for the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in St. Louis, Missouri. Materials document various phases of the design process, from preliminary sketches to working drawings, and include correspondence and specifications relating to building projects. The archive also includes some architectural drawings by other creators.

Specific media or processes represented include graphite, ink, diazo print, stat, blueprint, and photomechanical print.

Some ADE UNITS have additional materials to the drawings that are filed separately. If present, these series are noted at the end of the ADE UNIT's summary with the following options: specifications, photographs, and/or miscellaneous supplementary materials. These materials are not item inventoried but can be requested from a librarian while doing research in the Reading Room.

Arrangement

The collection is organized into 77 groups (UNITS or LOTs), which are usually based on separate building projects. Items are arranged numerically according to the staff-assigned UNIT or LOT number. Commission numbers are noted when available.
